INTRODUCTION.

IN presenting a re-print of the HULL and BEVERLEY DIRECTORY for the years 1791-2, the first work of the kind ever published, it seems appropriate to offer a few remarks descriptive of the aspect of the Town of Hull at that time, which may be found interesting to those who have not had the leisure to study the works of our local historians.

The period in question was one of the most interesting in the history of our town, since it marked the transition between the situation of Old Hull, cramped within the narrow limits of its ancient fortifications—those walls and battlements which had withstood many a rude assault, and which, as an old author quaintly wrote “were at once a prison and a safeguard to the inhabitants"*—and the new impetus given to commerce and progress by the formation of THE DOCK and the removal of the walls.

At this time Hull was a picturesque little place, its extent being principally marked by the lines of the fortifications. At the Southend there yet remained an ancient landing wharf, and a semi-circular battery of six guns, here had been placed the ducking chair for scolding wives, which is represented in Hilbert's engraving 1737. Directly opposite this landing place still remains the low arch, pierced through some antique tenements, and leading into Blackfriargate. This (now called Little Lane) was formerly the entrance into the town from the river, and beneath its narrow portal King Henry VIII., Queen Katherine Howard, and their brilliant suite, must have passed.

Turning to the left, the curious visitor would walk up the Back Ropery (now Humber Street), enter the Butchery (now Queen Street), and notice on his right a remnant of the Blackfriars' Monastery, and other old buildings occupying the site of the present Shambles. Walking forward, he would enter the Market Place and perceive the Statue of King William, not gilded as at present, but painted stone colour. Turning round, the observer would contemplate two remarkable buildings. On the left the old Guild Hall would meet his view; this was a quaint "Carcer nonnunquam firmum propugnaculum."—Meisner's Libellus novus politicus emblematicus Civitatum, 1638.

Elizabethan structure, built on arches, and not without a certain dignified appearance. On the right stood the lofty tower, then used as the County Gaol, which forms a prominent object in Hollar's plate of 1640, where it is termed the Ball (or Bell) Tower.* Adjoining it was a Guardhouse (at the end of Mytongate) from which peeped a cannon pointing directly down the Market Place, as if to quell instantly any popular outbreak.

Passing the grand old Parish Church, the visitor would have noticed the east end disfigured by the erection of a row of small shops built up against the Church-wall and window; which latter was filled in the lower half by a large painting of the Last Supper, "finely pourtrayed by Monsieur Parmentier." A portion of this picture now forms a curious object in the Church where it stands below the east window.

Silver Street being traversed, the observer would notice that Whitefriargate was principally composed of private houses; its western end was called Beverley Gate. The mouldering gate, which yet remained, overgrown with trees and rank vegetation, seemed to mourn over its decay, and would form a picturesque entrance to the town.

Looking southwards, might have been observed the Hessle Gate standing at the end of the present Humber Street, then called the Back Ropery. This was a massive structure, with a barbican spanning the moat, then dried up, and occupied by a rope-spinner's peaceful walk. Before each of these gates the visitor would notice large earthen mounds, portions of the ancient military outworks. In a charming plate in Hadley's History, the mound at Hesse Gate is utilised as an observatory by a party of ladies and gentlemen in fashionable attire, who are enjoying the fresh air, and the prospect of the shipping in the river.

Beyond Beverley Gate he would have seen that the town had made considerable progress to the north-west, many new streets having been laid out in the rear of the Infirmary. St. John's Church would be before him, but he could not reach it except by following the course of the present Junction Street into Waterworks Street, and then proceeding down Engine Street. A guardhouse stood opposite to Savile Street end. The Town Waterworks were in Engine Street, and an open reservoir, or "scoop dyke," as it was then called, occupied the site of the present St. John Street.

The Bowling Green in Waltham Street was in an open rural locality, and the Charterhouse was then nearly surrounded by fields. The North Gate stood at the end of High Street, but it was then in a very dilapidated condition.

On the east side of the River Hull, the North Blockhouse, built by King Henry VIII., formed a conspicuous object near the North Bridge. It was of the same form as the South Blockhouse which stood at the entrance of the Old Harbour, and between the two Blockhouses was the Castle, or Magazine, as it was called in 1791. The Citadel formed a triangular islet, being surrounded by a moat encompassing the ramparts.

Having briefly described the then state of the Town, it only remains to introduce our little re-print, which will be found to contain many interesting items. Some of the compound trades mentioned, read oddly enough, "stationer and mustard manufacturer," "taylor and staymaker," "woollen-draper and fruiterer," &c. The constables are tradesmen, as are also the Fire Engine Company, or Brigade, as we should now call it. Doubts have been expressed as to the particular Mace then carried in the civic processions, but these are cleared up by this book, in which both the Great Mace (the large silver-gilt mace now used) and the White Mace (one of the two smaller silver maces still owned by the Corporation) are mentioned, with the official bearers.

The list of the original shareholders of the Dock Company will be read with interest; their investments proved most lucrative; and well rewarded their patronage of this great undertaking.* It is amusing to notice (p. 65) that the Ferry Boats to Barton "go off" (like guns) at certain times, the Coaches "set off;" and we find that for London occupied three days in the journey. The Public-house signs

* The share purchased for the Charterhouse cost £250; for many years it gained a dividend of £55, and even £80, and was in 1819 capitalised at £1600, or 32 new shares of £50 each.—Cook's History of the Charterhouse.

too are curious, we find amongst them—The Old Whale, the New Whale, the Black Boy, the Cross Keys in the Market Place and in Whitefriargate, the Coach and Horses in Mytongate and also in Whitefriargate, the Tyger and the Rain Deer in the Market Place.

TO THE WORSHIPFUL
RALPH DARLING, Esq; Mayor,
THE WORSHIPFUL THE Aldermen, Bankers, Merchants, and Traders
IN KINGSTON upon HULL,

GENTLEMEN,

Impressed with a deep and grateful sense of the favors which you have conferred upon me, particularly for enabling me by your liberal encouragement, to undertake and execute the following publication, I am constrained to embrace the present favorable opportunity of returning you my sincerest thanks for such proofs of your benevolence and kindness.

As a Directory has been long wanted, and much wished for by several persons residing in this large commercial town, I now venture, under your auspices, to submit one to the inspection of the public: I flatter myself that this work will meet with your candid reception, and that its utility will entitle it to your future support and patronage. Should this eventually be the case, permit me to say, that it would afford a high degree of pleasure and satisfaction to,

Gentlemen,

your much obliged,

and most obedient,

New-Square,
Manor-Alley, Lowgate,
July 19, 1791.

humble servant.

R. G. Battle.

Advertisement.

HAVING employed much time and taken considerable pains in surveying the town, and investigating such local circumstances as were requisite to insert in a work of this nature, I hope it will, upon the whole be found tolerably correct and accurate, tho' in consequence of the houses not being numbered a considerable difficulty occurred, which rendered it morally impossible to give such a minute and circumstantial description of every particular as I wished to do: This obstacle, however, I hope will in future be surmounted—as the houses will be regularly numbered, which will enable me to give a more ample and distinct account of things, as I flatter myself will not fail of giving entire satisfaction, and conciliating your full approbation.—Should this eventually be the case, permit me to say, it will afford the utmost pleasure to,

The Editor.
